Thinking and Working
Many people, workmen as well as others, fall into the error of supposing that no brain work is necessary or desirable in mechanical labor. It is found that by going through a certain number of physical operations, the manufactured product is turned out; that these movements become, after a time, so easy that they are performed almost automatically, and that it is only by practice that perfection is attained. For these reasons it is thought that all a person needs in his work is the education of the eye, ear or hand, and that, by the training of any, or all of these, a person arrives at the proficiency which is indicated by the term "skilled." It is undoubtedly true that no amount of thinking will enable the steel-worker to tell when the metal is heated to the proper degree, and that it is only by the readiness of the eye in detecting the heat by the color that proficiency in this direction is acquired. No amount of brain work can take the place of that exquisite sense of touch which enables the file-maker to make the lines upon his steel so accurate that they can scarcely be counted by the unaided eye. No amount of learning can locate for the engineer the defective working in his engine which his acute sense of hearing discovers, and in very many other lines of industry the degree of accuracy which is attained, solely by constant repetition of the work, is very wonderful.

The question is, however, whether, in these very departments, the mechanic would not increase his value, both to himself and employer, were he to think while performing his work. It is certain that he would, by the use of his mind more perfectly, honor the nature of which he is possessed. The power to think is given by some writers as the distinguishing characteristic which divides man from the brute creation, and, if this be true, it ought not to satisfy any one that he is able to perform his work in that perfunctory manner in which the horse walks in the treadmill. If he does no more than this, he is an automatic machine, which needs only to be wound up and set in motion in order for it to perform the work for which it was made. It is this stolid satisfaction with which one regards the product of his labor, which prevents many from bettering their condition and from becoming of any other value to their day and generation than that which is estimated by the daily out-put of their handiwork.

We do not think that a man should despise his work, or that he should be satisfied with anything short of his utmost capabilities in this direction, but we do believe that workmen, while they continue in the foundry or shop, should be valuable members of society, by reason of their intelligence and influence. They need not graduate from their trade to be as much esteemed as any other class of persons. In addition to this duty that he owes to society, the workman should be a thinker, because it is by the exercise of his mind while at work that he may devise an improvement in machinery or a new use for material which will be an advantage to all, at the same time that it materially advances his pecuniary interests. There is no place better adapted to the exercise of inventive talent than the workshop, and no man can use it to better advantage than he who, by his practical knowledge, knows what can and what cannot be accomplished by a combination of the five mechanical powers.

Had all workmen labored only with their muscle, and allowed their minds to be inactive, the world would not now be reaping the benefits or enjoying the pleasures of many of the mechanical inventions of our day. Neither is there anything in the peculiar surroundings of mechanics which prevents them becoming as intelligent as any other class in the community. It is not possible, nor indeed desirable, for men to take books with them at their work, as Elihu Burritt did; but, by a judicious course of reading after working hours, they may acquire food for reflection which will keep their minds active throughout the day. Thought rules the world, and we see no reason why the laboring classes should not be as equal rulers in this sense as any. Thinking and working combined will make of them a power, and will so change their position that the possession of wealth and honor and influence will no longer be blessings to be enjoyed by an exceptional few of their number.—Industrial World.

MEDICINAL.

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR
NOTHING LIKE IT
Its peculiar efficacy is due as much to the process and skill in compounding as to the ingredients themselves. Take it in time. It checks diseases in the outset, or if they be advanced will prove a potent cure.
No Home should be Without It.
It takes the place of a doctor and costly prescriptions. All who lead sedentary lives will find it the best preventive of indigestion, constipation, headache, biliousness, piles and mental depression. No loss of time, no interference with business while taking. For children it is most innocent and harmless. No danger from exposure after taking. Cures Colic, Diarrhoea, Bowel Complaints, Feverishness and Febrile Colds. Invalids and delicate persons will find it the mildest aperient and tonic they can use. A little taken at night insures refreshing sleep and a natural evacuation of the bowels. A little taken in the morning sharpens the appetite, cleanses the stomach and sweetens the breath.
A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.
"I have been practicing medicine for twenty years and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons' Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system."
L. M. HIGGINS, M. D., Washington, Ark.

A CARD—We are aware that a number of Alexandrians go to Washington for their CHINA and GLASSWARE, and we believe that with the proper effort and attention all or nearly all of these people can be induced to buy goods in these lines at home. We intend therefore to do all in our power to further this end, and for this purpose we have selected our stock for fall with more than usual care and foresight. Our retail department, besides, we put under the especial care of our salesman, and it will be his duty to see that the stock is always full, and to attend to the wants of our Alexandrian customers. We only keep "firsts" (goods selected by the manufacturer as perfect), and we buy only from the manufacturers. For this reason, we can sell you not only the best goods, but at the very lowest prices.
